

Who Will Save Me?

Mushiba: Save us from those who would want to save us," is a favorite statement I read years ago. I think most of us have experienced someone telling us what is the best thing for us. Most people are well meaning in their attempt to save us (especially from ourselves, as they would perceive it). There are others, however, who try to impose their beliefs on us because they think that they hold the one answer ~ the one and only truth ~ and so must we.

Waith has periodically spoken of Spiritual Elitists, those who think they have all the right answers ~ the right way to meditate, the right clothes to wear, the right way to eat, think, behave. Consider his words:

Waith: “There are many who believe it is their duty to save others ~ you cannot avoid them. The more that you seek the answers from within Self, the more you will be susceptible to those who feel that you need to be saved, for when you find the answers within Self, you do not need externals. And, when you do not need externals, these externals lose the power they have, and therefore, their status quo is shaken, lost, or threatened ~ and they, then, would want to maintain their power by telling you what to do.”

I believe that we will have people who come to us and feel that we need to be saved ~ we do not believe as they do, theirs is the only truth, and therefore, if we do not believe as they do, we are damned. It is a most difficult lesson. It is a test for each of us to develop our own strength and develop the faith that we must have in the connectedness of us, as entities, with The Universal Consciousness.

So, Who Will Save Me? Why, ME, of course!! I'm Fine!
