

Planning Our Own Playground

Mushiba: The Planning Process for events and activities can be a learning experience because while most of what happens can be planned, something unexpected can occur. And it is that unexpected element that can test our mettle and provide an opportunity for learning and growth.

Waith enjoys using the analogy of a Playground when he discusses our journey on the earth plane. Here is an example of how he described his Playground theme:

Question: “Is our life predetermined before we come here, including with whom we will be interacting?”

Waith: “You plan your scenarios before entry on the earth plane. However, once you are on the plane, it can change because what looks good in the planning stage does not necessarily happen in reality.”

“As you travel your path ~ and this is where your true growth occurs ~ you will come upon entities who have their own path who are coming in contact with your path, unexpectedly. And then, you are each tested for what you have come in to learn.”

“You think you are smart planning it all ahead of time and thinking that you will have all the answers when you meet with a particular entity because you have predetermined it. If that were the case of being predetermined, there would be no need to do it, for the fun would be gone ~ thus, it is Playtime on the Earth Plane, as we like to refer to it.

“So, it is not predetermined ~ the behaviors and the outcomes ~ for even if the scenario is planned ahead of time, entities have the ability to change the scenario once they come onto the earth plane playground. You can be on the plane for several years and say, ‘This isn’t what I want to do ~ I want to change this,’ and you can. It is as simple as that. You plan your own playground and then you wait to see who is going to show up on your playground.”

I love Waith’s use of a Playground to describe the Planning of our lesson learning. Here is a humorous example: Terra Lux had a Waith gathering planned on a week night (with most coming directly from their work environment). We asked people to bring a food item to share ~ as was our custom. We always had a wonderful variety of salad, protein, bread and dessert. This particular time, every person brought some type of chocolate dessert! We agreed that each person had ‘heard’ a message from The Universe that we all needed the comfort and stress relief that most feel from eating chocolate! A glorious time was enjoyed!
