

Waiting for the Acknowledgement of Others

Mushiba: The Search for Self is Waith's definitive guidance upon which all of his information is based. Yet, Self is only half of the equation ~ Others complete it, as reflected in Waith's Guidelines for Growth. The way in which we interact with Others, then, is a double-edged sword that the following Waith quote reflects:

Waith: "If you were to wait for the acknowledgement of Others, you would truly wait for eternity. You must simply do what your Soul tells you to do and what you feel is right. There will be those who will listen and hear and come to you and love what you are doing."

Conversely, there will be those who do not like what we say or do which goes to the heart of Waith's guidance. It is our relationships with Others that foster our strongest lessons: "Do I listen to Others and reflect on their input or do I ignore them?" Not being acknowledged, I believe, is a key to the growth and nurturing of Self ~ and, simultaneously, Others.
